

Are you a budding filmmaker, director, cinematographer, actor or screenwriter?

Barnes Film Academy Film Workshops

If films are your passion and you are aged 8 to 15, Barnes Film Academy (BFA) is offering you the opportunity to create your own productions in the school holidays with a variety of workshops including five-day filmmaking courses, and three day editing programmes.

Established in 2013 by Samuel Cullis, and based in Barnes, South West London, BFA allows students the chance to express their creativity through the camera. Students are provided with the chosen theme and genre of the workshop and are then responsible for creating their vision through script and screenwriting as a team. Using professional and specialist equipment, students learn a range of skills in camerawork, sound, script writing, editing, animation, and directing.

Led by a professional, friendly and approachable team with knowledge of the media, filmmaking and creative skills, BFA aims to inspire, educate and discover talent in the future generation.

For more information on upcoming courses, please contact Sam Cullis, Course Leader:

Reviews

"My son really enjoyed the week - he was full of stories, surprised at how hard work making a film is and keen to do more."

"Is there any better way to spend the summer, than in Barnes by the pond, making friends and flexing your creative muscles? My son loved every minute of the Barnes Film Academy"

"Fantastically well organized, you felt part of a proper film crew, all of the ages of children mixed well together".

Alfonso Cuarón, friend of BFA, told us, "children today have access to unprecedented ways of making movies, yet that is still no substitute to learning about film within a community of equally passionate kids under the mentorship of people who can guide their enthusiasm."
